Communities In Schools of Seattle

Every day kids wake up without enough - enough warm clothes, enough food, moving from place to place, sleeping on couches, and so much more. These kids come through all of these challenges every day and make it into our school buildings - an amazing thing to achieve with so much standing in their way.

Communities In Schools exists to help these young people. We connect them with resources for food, clothes, and housing, and we do even more. Site coordinators are there in the school building every day, assisting students when they struggle with behavior and academics. Site coordinators teach students to advocate for themselves, to navigate complex school systems and policies, and seek out mentors. All of these efforts are focused on preparing students to graduate and become successful adults.
